

The Washington Post

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 2008

The Washington Post

Style

Northern Virginia

Today

[CONCERT] Junior League A folksy, quaint Friday is what you'll have if you catch this local sextet (influenced by Hank Williams, Alison Krauss and, it seems, Columbia Heights . . .) when it plays Iota Club & Cafe tonight. With High Society and Stella Schindler. $10. 9:30 p.m. Iota Club & Cafe, 2832 Wilson Blvd., Arlington. 703-522-8340.

Tomorrow

[FESTIVALS] Alexandria St. Patrick's Day Parade The Ballyshaners and the city throw this family-centric parade, yes, more than two weeks before the actual Irish celebration — so early that you might not be in the mood to drink green beer. But this celebration is about families, with its totally not-serious dog show (categories include dog/owner look-alike and longest ears), classic car show and parade. The 27th annual parade, with the archbishop of Baltimore as its grand marshal, is tomorrow in Old Town.

Free. Car show, 10 a.m. (North Pitt Street at King Street); dog contest, 10:30 a.m. (North Royal and King streets); parade, 12:30-2:30 p.m. (King from West to Fairfax streets). For information, visit www.ballyshaners.org.

BY ENOCH CHAN

Jane Franklin Dance, which performs in "Sound Walk" tomorrow.

[ON STAGE] "Sound Walk" Jane Franklin Dance's latest work, "Sound Walk," is a high-concept, four-part piece that features marimbas, strings and youth choruses — the sounds taking the spotlight and leading dancers' footwork. The work, with guest artist Florian Roullier, is performed tomorrow. $30; seniors and students, $27;

ages 12 and younger, $16 (discounted tickets available through today at www.janefranklin.com). 8 p.m. Rachel M. Schlesinger Concert Hall and Arts Center, 3001 N. Beauregard St., Alexandria. 703-933-1111.